Good morning, Elizabeth.

I'm hoping that you might be able to shed some insight on how our library might best deal with or respond to the following blog postings made by the people who have brought the complaint against the WBCML.

I'm concerned about the morale of my colleagues. It's difficult for them to bear this barrage of negativity day after day. Being tried in the court of public opinion that's been shaped by talk radio and blogs that post things taken out of context has created a depressive work environment. I've noticed that rational and reasonable discussion is not what the TV networks and local papers pick up on. Incendiary remarks and partial truths sell air time and newsprint.

Thank you for any assistance which you might be able to provide.

Michael
